Scotch

Blended scotch whisky may contain a combination of whiskies from over 40 or 50 different malt and grain distilleries. The percentage of malt used will determine the quality and smoothness of taste and character. Each whisky used in the blending process will normally have been matured for about 5 years.

Tequila

Blanco or Silver: Clear and transparent, fresh from the still tequila is called Blanco (white or silver) and must be bottled immediately after the distillation process. Oro or Gold: Is tequila Blanco mellowed by the addition of colorants and flavorings, caramel being the most common. Reposado or Rested: It is Blanco that has been kept (or rested) in white oak casks or vats called "pipones" for more than two months and up to one year. The oak barrels give Reposado a mellowed taste, pleasing bouquet, and its pale color. Añejo or Aged: Blanco tequila aged in white oak casks for more than a year.

Vodka

The birth date of Vodka has been estimated around the beginning of the twelfth century. Made for medical purposes, this crude anesthetic and disinfectant was distilled from rye. Although vodka began as rye-based liquor, as it became more popular to the masses, the potato became the ingredient of choice. The potato was much more common, and although the vodka did not taste as well, much easier to distill from than other grains. As vodka made the switch from a family made liquor to one that was produced on a grand scale by large distilleries, the potato was discarded and grain was embraced. Today most brands of vodka are distilled from rye, wheat, barley, and most commonly corn. Vodka is distilled at very high proofs and then filtered through vegetable charcoal. The higher the proof, the less the flavor and clearer the color.

Whiskey

From the Gaelic for "water of life", spirituous liquor distilled from a fermented mash of grains, usually rye, barley, oats, wheat, or corn. The standard whiskeys of the world are Scotch (commonly spelled whisky), Irish, American, and Canadian. American whiskeys are divided into two main varieties, rye and bourbon, a corn whiskey that derives its name from Bourbon co., Ky.

Single Malts

Speyside

The Speyside single malts are noted in general for their elegance and complexity, and often a refined smokiness.

Beyond that, they have two extremes: the big, sherried types, as typified by The Macallan; and the lighter, less colourful style of the "Glens".

Lowlands

This area tends to produce whiskies in which the softness of the malted barley itself is evident, untempered by Highland or Island peatiness or coastal brine and seaweed.

Highlands

By far the biggest region, the Highlands inevitably embraces wide variations. The western part of the Highlands, have a rounded, firm, dry character, with some peatiness. The far north of the Highlands has a notably heathery, spicy, character which probably derives both from the local soil and the coastal location of the distilleries. The more sheltered East Highlands and the Midlands of Scotland (sometimes described as the South Highlands) have a number of notably fruity whiskies.

Islay

Considered by many to be the greatest of whisky islands; Islay is blessed with numerous pockets of peat bog, lashed by the wind, rain and sea. The single malts from this are noted for their seaweed, iodine-like, phenolic character.

No other spirit is as influenced by its environment as the single malt. Scotch malt whisky is the embodiment of the French concept of "goût de terroir"-- taste imparted by the soils, the air, the water, the shape of the still, the wood it's aged in, etc. single malts are all different, distinctly different.

Brandy/Cognac

Very Special (VS), the youngest spirit of the assembly, may not be less than four and a half years old. Very Special Old Pale (VSOP) is between four and a half and six and a half years old. Extra Old (XO) Napoléon, and Impérial, X.O. are assemblies of spirits that are at least six and a half years old.

Cordials

Cordials (also known as liqueurs) are sweet, flavor-infused spirits that are categorized according to the flavoring agent (i.e., fruits, nuts, herbal and spice blends, creams and such). The word liqueur comes from the Latin liquifacere ("to dissolve") and refers to the dissolving of flavorings in the spirits. Top-quality liqueurs are produced by distillation of either the fermented flavor materials or the spirit in which they have been infused. Many liqueurs use finished spirits such as Cognac, Rum or Whisky as their base.

Gin

Gin triumphed in the 1920s, the first Cocktail Age, after having been scarce during the 1914 - 1918 World War. Gin became the darling of the famous Cunard cruises. During the 90s and 30s the newly popular idea of the cocktail party crossed the Atlantic from the USA to Britain via an American hostess who wanted to fill in for her friends the blank time between teatime and dinner. By 1951 the Bartenders' Guild had registered 7,000 cocktails on its files.

Rum

Sugarcane is the main ingredient in making rum. First, the sugarcane is boiled down and the remaining residue is spun until crystallized. Then it is separated from its congealed form, known as molasses. The molasses is reboiled, mixed with water and yeast, then set to distill for a minimum of 3 years (usually 5 to 7 years). Lighter rums are aged from 1 to 4 years.
